Concept

The aim of this international workshop is to critically question and investigate the crisis Libya has been experiencing in recent years, since the NATO bombings and military intervention of 2011, from the perspective of the interaction between various scales, from global migrations and geopolitics to local dynamics of change, tension and negotiation. Combining approaches of international relations, anthropology, and history, the aim is also to question the relationship between the sphere of the local and more global trends. The workshop features scholars from both Germany and abroad, with a focus on Libyan scholars, whose voices have been largely unheard in recent analyses of the Libyan crisis. A specific focus is also put on the urban dimension, from the resurgence of factional territories to the existence of migrant camps. Given Libya's current role in migration and the internal crises it is facing, this workshop is intended as an occasion to reflect on the roots and consequences of war and on the entanglement of scales as far as migration and security are concerned.
